JDS 1 (2008)

Articles

FRIEDERIKE ASSANDRI Laozi’s Eclipse and Comeback: The Narrative Frame of the Benji jing 1
STEPHEN ESKILDSEN Do Immortals Kill? The Controversy Surrounding Lü Dongbin 28
LOUIS KOMJATHY Mapping the Daoist Body (1): The Neijing tu in History 67
ROBERT SANTEE Stress Management and the Zhuangzi 93
JAMES D. SELLMANN Establishing the Altar: The Realized Writ of the Suqi Rite in the Grand Jiao 124

Forum on Contemporary Practice

XUN LIU Profile of a Quanzhen Doctor: Abbot Huang Zongsheng at Wuhan’s Monastery of Eternal Spring 145
SCOTT P. PHILLIPS Portrait of an American Daoist: Charles Belyea / Liu Ming 161
ROBIN R. WANG Daoists on the Southern Marchmount 177
MICHAEL RINALDINI How I Became A Daoist Priest 181
LIVIA KOHN Grand Offering in Hong Kong 188
ELIJAH SIEGLER Field Notes: Taoist Tai Chi Society & Fung Loy Koh Temple 192
MICHAEL WINN Daoist Neidan: Lineage and Secrecy Challenges for Western Adepts 195

News of the Field

JDS 2 (2009)

Articles

TAEHYUN KIM Reading Zhuangzi Eco-Philosophically 1
SHAWN ARTHUR Eating Your Way to Immortality: Early Daoist Self-Cultivation Diets 32
LOUIS KOMJATHY Mapping the Daoist Body (2): The Text of the Neijing tu 64
VOLKER OLLES Lord Lao’s Mountain: From Celestial Master Daoism to Contemporary Daoist Practice 109
WAN-LI HO Daoist Nuns in Taiwan: A Case Study of the Daode yuan 137

Forum on Contemporary Practice

HARRISON MORETZ The Dao Is Not for Sale 167
MICHAEL WINN Daoist Methods for Dissolving the Heart-Mind 177
CHARLOTTE FURTH Exploring Daoist Women’s Meditation 185
YANG LIZHI, TODD STOLL, & CHEN MEI Mt. Wudang and Daoism 193
BRIAN L. KENNEDY & ELIZABETH NAI-JIA GUOTaiwanese Daoist Temple Parades and their Martial Motifs 197

News of the Field
Articles

ALAN K. L. CHAN  Affectivity and the Nature of the Sage: Gleanings from a Tang Daoist Master 1
NORMAN HARRY ROTHSCILD  Empress Wu and the Queen Mother of the West 29
SHIH-SHAN SUSAN HUANG  Daoist Imagery of Body and Cosmos, Part 1: Body Gods and Starry Travel 57
KENNETH R. ROBINSON  Daoist Geographies in Three Korean World Maps from the Sixteenth Century 91
ADELINE HERROU  A Day in the Life of a Daoist Monk 117

Forum on Contemporary Practice

ELLIOET COHEN  Psychology and Daoism: Resisting Psychologization—Assisting Dialogue 151
SETHE HARSTER  Practice in the Classroom: To Taiji or Not to Taiji 163
MARK JOHNSON  Ni Hua-Ching’s Americanization of “The Eternal Breath of Dao” 177
ELENA VALUSSI  Women’s Qigong in America: Tradition, Adaptation, and New Trends 187
JEAN DEBERNARDI  Wudang Mountain and the Modernization of Daoism 202

News of the Field

JDS 4 (2011)

Articles

JEONGSOO SHIN  From Paradise to Garden: The Construction of Penglai and Xuanpu 1
SHIH-SHAN SUSAN HUANG  Daoist Imagery of Body and Cosmos, Part 2: Body Worms and Internal Alchemy 32
STEPHEN JACKOWICZ  Daoist Incantations for Acupuncture 63
M. CRISTINA ZACCARINI  Daoist-inspired Healing in Daily Life: Lü Dongbin and the Multifaceted Roles of Chinese Barbers 80
GEORGES FAVRAUD  A Daoist Career in Modern China: Wang Xin’an of the Southern Peak 104

Forum on Contemporary Practice

MARY BOCKOVER  Daoism, Ethics, and Faith: The Invisible Goodness of Life 139
BILL HULET  Daoism in the West: Following Buddhist and Christian Models? 154
IMKE BOCK-MÖBIUS  Daoism and Entirety in Quantum Physics 162
MARY KAY RYAN  Infusing Chinese Medicine with Spirit: Daoism, Shamanism, and Chinese Medicine in the Modern World 175
RITA EGIZII  Daoism as a Solution for Sustainable Business 190
SUZANNE CAHILL  What to Fear and How to Protect Yourself: Daoism and Hong Kong Horror Movies 202

News of the Field
JDS 5 (2012)

Articles

Jennifer Lundin Ritchie
The Guodian Laozi and Taiyi shengshui: A Cognitive Science Reading 1

Lucas Weiss
Rectifying the Deep Structures of the Earth: Sima Chengzhen and the Standardization of Daoist Sacred Geography in the Tang 31

Paul Crowe
Nature, Motion, and Stillness: Li Daochun’s Vision of the Three Teachings 61

Ian Johnson
Two Sides of a Mountain: The Modern Transformation of Maoshan 89

Bede Benjamin Bidlack
Alchemy and Martial Arts: Wang Yannian’s Gold Mountain Daoism 117

Forum on Contemporary Practice

Yves Réquena
The Biochemistry of Internal Alchemy: Decapitating the Red Dragon 143

Dylan Bolles & Lynette Hunter
Scoring Daoist Energy: A Rhetoric of Collaboration 155

Felix Breuer
Feldenkrais’s Spontaneous Action and Laozi’s Wuwei 171

Patricia Karetzky
Daoist Themes by Women Artists 186

Songhae Kim
The Gourd of Small Penglai: The Ecological Symbols of Qiu Changchun 205

News of the Field

JDS 6 (2013)

Articles

Galia Dor
The Chinese Gate: A Unique Void for Inner Transformation 1

Mihwa Choi
Materializing Salvation: A Liturgical Program and Its Agenda 29

Elmar Oberfrank
Secretly Transmitted Direct Pointers to the Great Elixir 58

Daniel M. Murray & James Miller
The Daoist Society of Brazil and the Globalization of Orthodox Unity Daoism 93

Xu Liying
Daoist Temples in Modern City Life: The Singapore City God Temple 115

Forum on Contemporary Practice

Sharon Small
New Visions of the Zhuangzi 145

Michael M. Tophoff
Daoist Principles in the Martial Arts: Their Relevance for Illness Prevention 161

Adam D. Frank
Enacting a Daoist Aesthetic through Taiji quan Training 176

Gerhard Milbrat & Knut Gollenbeck
Master Li Jiacheng and the New Ways of Internal Alchemy 193

Steve Jackowicz
Om Mani Padme Hum in Daoist Revision 203

Jeanne White
Flowing in Life with the Yijing 211

News of the Field
Articles

Paul D’Ambrosio
Blending Dao: An Analysis of Images in the Daode jing
1

Thomas E. Smith
The Many Faces of Master Redpine
27

David Boyd
The “Other” Dao in Town: Early Lingbao Polemics on Shangqing
61

Paul Crowe
Dao Learning and the Golden Elixir: Shared Paths to Perfection
88

P. G. G. van Enckevort
The Three Treasures: An Enquiry into the Writings of Wu Shouyang
117

Forum on Contemporary Practice

Eske Møllgaard
Sage-knowledge and Equality in the Zhuangzi
147

E. Leslie Williams
Becoming One with the Dao: Meditation in Daode jing and Dōgen
163

Kenneth Cohen
Spirit and Life in Balance: Zhao Bizhen’s Lasting Influence on Qigong and the Martial Arts 179

Ju Keyi & Lü Xianlong
Tiandi jiao: The Daoist Connection
195

Christopher Cott
Interviewing Daoist Masters: A Reality Check
213

Martin Schönfeld
Laozi and the New Green Paradigm
226

News of the Field
FRIEDERIKE ASSANDRI

Laozi’s Eclipse and Comeback: The Narrative Frame of the Benji jing

The Six Dynasties, Sui, and early Tang dynasties were a period of intense and complex development for Daoism. New scriptures, new gods, and new cosmological systems appeared, and Daoism found its way into the highest levels of society and the imperial court. This necessitated a streamlining and integration of very different traditions and teachings. Imperial patronage, competition with Buddhism, as well as dedicated work by proponents of different Daoist currents created a complex interplay, which still has to be studied in detail. This task is especially daunting because historical or historiographical documentation concerning the development of Daoism in the Six Dynasties is rather scarce.

In this paper, I propose a hermeneutic reading of the framework narrative of the Benji jing (Scripture on the Original Beginning) to gain some insights about this development. The text was composed during the Sui and early Tang dynasties, a time when the process of integration was well advanced but had not yet concluded. The framework narrative, as seen in the hermeneutical context of the historical development of Daoism, reflects internal Daoist struggles and highlights the problems of the esoteric transmission of scriptures. A closer look at the position of the deity Laozi in the text, moreover, betrays tensions between him and the various deities of the southern traditions. The latter had increasingly eclipsed him until the rise of the Tang re-established him in the first ranks of the Daoist pantheon. I argue that these tensions may very well reflect tensions among different groups of Daoists in the process of integration during the Sui and the early Tang.

STEPHEN ESKILDSEN

Do Immortals Kill? The Controversy Surrounding Lü Dongbin

This paper examines what Buddhist texts, vernacular novels and Daoist texts variously tell us about Lü Dongbin’s sword, and whether or not he ever used it to carry out or attempt murder. It then proceeds to examine—through Tang and Song Daoist sources—what sorts of actual Daoist practices and claims may have been instrumental in engendering such stories.

LOUIS KOMJATHY

Mapping the Daoist Body (1): The Neijing tu in History

This article examines the history and content of the Neijing tu (Diagram of Internal Pathways), a late nineteenth-century stele currently housed in Baiyun guan (White Cloud Monastery; Beijing). The diagram is one of the most well-known illustrations of the Daoist body, though its historical provenance has not been sufficiently documented to date.

The present article provides a more complete account of its context of production and dissemination, namely, within the context of Baiyun guan, the late imperial Longmen (Dragon Gate) lineage of the Quanzhen (Complete Perfection) monastic order, and elite imperial court culture. I then turn to a systematic study of its contents and the Daoist methods expressed in its contours. Within its topographical landscape, one finds a specific vision of the Daoist body, a body actualized through Daoist alchemical praxis. As such, the Neijing tu and its various rubbings were more than likely intended as visual aids for Daoist religious training.

For readability, the article has been divided into two parts. The current section discusses the diagram’s historical and terminological dimensions. The second part, scheduled to be published in the next issue of the Journal of Daoist Studies, focuses on content and includes a complete bilingual translation with illustrations.

ROBERT SANTTEE

Stress Management and the Zhuangzi

This paper examines the relevance of the teachings of the Zhuangzi to addressing stress and the physical and psychological problems associated with it. It views the teachings of the Zhuangzi within the context of two basic approaches to addressing stress: the cognitive approach and the experiential approach. And it explores the relationship between the teachings of the Zhuangzi and mind/body medicine, psychonueroimmunology, and cognitive therapy within the framework of stress management.
JAMES D. SELLMANN

Establishing the Altar: The Realized Writ of the Announcement Rite in the Grand Jiao

An analysis of the structure, content, and function of the Zhenwen in the Announcement (sūqi) ritual shows that its purpose is to enact a feudal-like “contract” with the cosmic powers, spiritual officials, and the Holy-Emperors of the five directions. The ritual provides an opportunity for the priest’s mystical union with the Dao. The Zhenwen offers a strong sense of security to the community that sponsors a Festival of Renewal (jiao) in which the five Zhenwen are implanted in the universe. Because the Zhenwen contacts and “contracts” the sovereign deities of the five directions and their various subordinates, such as the controllers of the charts and registers, this ensures that the proper functioning of the universe continues, and it prevents natural disaster or untimely death. Thus, the Zhenwen fulfills an important role in religious Daoism in that it spiritualizes both the Daoist priest in mystical union and the religious community in securing harmony. The Lingbao zhenwen plays a pivotal function in the liturgy.

JDS 2 (2009)

TAEHYUN KIM

Reading Zhuangzi Eco-Philosophically

This paper examines the philosophy of the Zhuangzi from the perspective of Western ecophilosophy. They are similar in that they are both anthropocentric in outlook and founded on a dualism defined through human criteria. The philosophy of the Zhuangzi begins with the tension between humans and nature; it criticizes people for thinking of themselves as the center of the universe. The critical anthropology of the text can be interpreted as anti-anthropocentrism in the context of modern ecology.

I find the concept of wandering in the Zhuangzi a way of creating “multicentric landscape through Dao.” By devotion to Dao as universal reality, the Zhuangzi invalidates human dualism and retrieves the meaning and value of the individual in nature. Discussing the problem of social hierarchy and discrimination, the text provides a comprehensive framework to approach the relationship among self, society, and nature. Ecology in the Zhuangzi thus has three main tenets: 1) defending anti-anthropocentrism, 2) recovering the status of the myriad things through and by nature, 3) working towards self-purification for harmony with society and nature.

SHAWN ARTHUR

Eating Your Way to Immortality: Early Daoist Self-Cultivation Diets

This paper examines health- and body-related claims made in the Lingbao Wufuxu (The Preface to the Five Lingbao Talismans of Numinous Treasure), an early medieval Daoist text that contains seventy recipes for attaining health, longevity, and spiritual benefit. Synthesizing the text’s myriad claims and analyzing their implicit assumptions, I work to develop an integrated picture of what was considered crucial for a healthy body, what techniques were used to attain this ideal, and what goals were sought using these practices. I examine the text’s claims about becoming physically and spiritually healthy, its proposed stages of purification and refinement, and the range of indicators by which adherents can measure progress toward their ideal state. Not only does this study provide a new interpretation of the Wufuxu’s dietary regimens, it also illustrates how Chinese medical theories influenced the text’s authors to present immortality as a logical evolution of health-perfecting practices. This analysis leads to questions of how the idea of perfecting one’s health functions within the worldview and ritual practices of early Daoists.

LOUIS KOMJATHY

Mapping the Daoist Body (2): The Text of the Neijing tu

Part One of the present article, published in JDS 1 (2008), presented the historical and terminological contours of the Neijing tu Neijing tu Neijing tu Neijing tu 非我圖 (Diagram of Internal Pathways). As a late nineteenth-century stele commissioned by the Longmen monk and court eunuch Liu Chengyin 劉誠印 (Suyun 素雲, Pure Cloud; d. 1894), it is currently housed in the Baiyun guan 白雲觀 (White Cloud Monastery; Beijing). This installment focuses on the content of the diagram as well as the Daoist cultivation methods embedded in its contours.

I first provide a thorough analysis of the textual and visual dimensions of the Neijing tu, including a complete translation with the diagram divided into three sections. The article also clarifies some influences on this Daoist body map and its corresponding internal alchemy system, specifically indicating a possible connection with the emerging Wu-Liu 伍柳 sub-lineage of Longmen.
This analysis is followed by a reconstruction of Daoist alchemical practice as expressed in the Neijing tu. I emphasize three methods: praxis-oriented applications of classical Chinese medical views of the body; visualizations which draw their inspiration from the Huangting jing and find clear historical precedents in Shangqing Daoism; and the alchemical technique known as the Waterwheel or Microcosmic Orbit. The three techniques form an interconnected system, wherein the adept's overall psychosomatic health is maintained and strengthened, his body is osmicated, and he awakens the mystical body, the body-beyond-the-body or yang-spirit, i.e., the culmination of alchemical transformation and the precondition for post-mortem transcendence.

VOLKER OELLES

Lord Lao’s Mountain: From Celestial Master Daoism to Contemporary Daoist Practice

The Mountain of Lord Lao (Laojun shan 老君山) in Xinjin 新津 District, Sichuan 四川 Province, has been identified as the center of a former diocese of Celestial Master Daoism (Tianshi dao 天師道). Moreover, it remains a famous sanctuary for the worship of Laozi 老子. The temple on Mt. Laojun is today an active religious institution that belongs to the Dragon Gate (Longmen 龍門) lineage of Complete Perfection (Quanzhen 全真) Daoism. In the late Qing dynasty and Republican times, the temple was closely connected with a popular religious movement called the Teachings of the Liu School (Liumen jiao 劉門教), which was founded by the Confucian scholar Liu Yuan 劉沅 (1768-1856). In this paper, several aspects of Mt. Laojun's past and present will be highlighted. Special emphasis will be placed on the Liumen movement and the impact that this community made on the recent development of the sanctuary. We will see that the current hagiographic legitimization of Mt. Laojun, which holds that Lord Lao once dwelled there and engaged in secluded self-cultivation, very likely has been fabricated by the patriarchs of the Liumen movement. This sacred site is an excellent example of a former Celestial Masters’ diocese that still functions as a Daoist institution in contemporary China, and the multifaceted Daoist traditions of Sichuan are reflected in its modern history.

WAN -LI HO

Daoist Nuns in Taiwan: A Case Study of the Daode yuan

The Gaoxiong Daode yuan 高雄道德院 is the first and only community of celibate female Daoists in Taiwan. Established in 1960, it draws on practices from both the Zhengyi 正一 (Orthodox Unity, i.e., Celestial Masters) and Quanzhen 全真 (Complete Perfection) schools. The article argues that while the majority of Taiwan Daoists follow the Zhengyi tradition, the priestesses and nuns at the Daode yuan have adopted Quanzhen practices to create their own unique religious tradition. Their unique syncretism represents major modifications of the Daoist tradition and serves as an example of the interaction among different schools as they adapt to modern religious and social needs while preserving traditional roots.

JDS 3 (2010)

ALAN K. L. CHAN

Affectivity and the Nature of the Sage: Gleanings from a Tang Daoist Master

This essay explores the place of qing in conceptions of the nature and being of the sage, focusing on the Tang Daoist master Wu Yun. What it seeks to show is that assumptions about the attainability of “sagehood” and the “nature” (xing) of human beings inform the interpretation of qing. In this context, the idea that the sage is quintessentially wuqing, marked by the absence of desire and emotions, will be examined. I will close with a comparative note on a Confucian account of the same period—namely, the Fuxing shu by Li Ao.

NORMAN HARRY ROTHSCCHILD

Empress Wu and the Queen Mother of the West

This essay examines the curious and significant role played by the Queen Mother of the West, the most powerful female deity in the Daoist pantheon, in political rhetoric crafted by Wu Zhao and her capable team of rhetoricians. As Gaozong’s empress, Wu Zhao offered a sacrifice at a shrine to the Queen Mother of the West on Mount Song. This unique female sovereign developed a repertoire of symbols and ceremonies that were associated with the Daoist goddess. Wu Zhao also cast her image in the same mold of timeless beauty as Xiwangmu. Finally, in her later years, surrounded by perfumed youths, Wu Zhao theatrically transformed her inner court into a Daoist fairyland, styling herself a latter-day Queen Mother of the West.
SHIH-SHAN SUSAN HUANG

Daoist Imagery of Body and Cosmos, Part 1: Body Gods and Starry Travel

This article presents Daoist visual representations of body and cosmos, drawing extensively on illustrations and diagrams from texts preserved in the Ming-dynasty Daoist Canon. To examine how the Daoist perception of body and cosmos unfolded over time, I discuss images of four types: body gods, imaginary journeys to stars, grotesque spirits and body worms, and the body transformed in internal alchemy—the first two in this part, the next two in JDS 4 (2011).

The current work hopes to contribute to interdisciplinary studies of Chinese art, religion, and science. From the visual perspective, it hopes to add to the on-going examination of charts or maps (tu | |) and to enrich our understanding of the representation and perception of what “body” means in Chinese visual culture. In terms of Daoist studies, my dominantly visual approach aims to complement the many textual approaches on this topic. This study also adds to the growing scholarship of Daoist art, which has so far focused more on public devotional paintings and statuary and less on private imagery associated with meditation and visualization.

KENNETH R. ROBINSON

Daoist Geographies in Three Korean World Maps

Four Korean maps of the world compiled during the Chosŏn period show Chosŏn of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries and present known lands from Japan to continental western Europe. These maps are informed by a Confucian ordering of culture and by Daoist conceptions of space. However, the Daoist geography of continents and paradise isles differs among the four maps.

The Tenri University Library’s Tae Myŏng-guk to (Map of Great Ming) and the Honmyŏji temple’s Tae Myŏng-guk chido (Map of Great Ming) present the most detailed Daoist geographies. Korean elites in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries were well read in Chinese poetry, and wrote often of travel to destinations such as those described in Shizhou ji (Record of the Ten Continents). These two world maps recast confirmed lands within the four seas where Daoist continents and paradise isles were located and immortals resided.

ADELINE HERROU

A Day in the Life of a Daoist Monk

This article seeks to give an ethnographical description of the everyday life of an ordinary Daoist monk in China today. As it follows Yang Zhixiang from early morning until night, it deals with his current main occupations—in this case, work on the glyphomancical dissection of the Dao 道 character, fate calculation for young fiancés, preparation for a healing ritual, the ascetic practice of self-perfecting through refinement, etc. — as well as more basic scenes such as meals, gestures and postures, various domestic tasks, and the reconstruction of the temple. It also relates fragments of his own past life and implicitly outlines the path that led him to the monastery and the vocation that made him become a monk. Finally, it aims to convey the diversity of the monks’ activities and then, by considering them serially as a whole, to arrive at an understanding of the specific texture of Daoist monastic life and its reason for being.

JDS 4 (2011)

JEONGSOO SHIN

From Paradise to Garden: The Construction of Penglai and Xuanpu

This paper examines two lines of development from paradise to garden in ancient and medieval China. It problematizes contrasting differences of Penglai (Immortals’ Isles) and Xuanpu (Hanging Garden) by analyzing a selection of mythological, historical, and literary texts. It concludes that they were founded on the two different kinds of Daoist desires, secular and transcendental.

Penglai and other islands developed into a formula of three islands in one pond beginning in the Qin-Han epoch (221 B.C.E.-220 C.E.). They then came to play an integral role in imperial garden culture both in China and neighboring countries. Emperors saw the active incorporation of otherworldly island paradises as an effective way to enhance prestige or substitute their desire for eternal life. In contrast, the Hanging Garden was created for the crown prince mainly during the Northern and Southern Dynasties. Prince Zhaoming (501-531) transformed it from a pleasure garden into a natural park in concert with aristocratic eremitism.
SHIH-SHAN SUSAN HUANG

Daoist Imagery of Body and Cosmos, Part 2: Body Worms and Internal Alchemy
This article presents Daoist visual representations of body and cosmos, drawing extensively on illustrations and diagrams from texts preserved in the Ming-dynasty Daoist Canon. To examine how the Daoist perception of body and cosmos unfolded over time, I discuss images of four types: body gods, imaginary journeys to stars, body souls/worms, and the body transformed in internal alchemy—the first two in JDS 3 (2010), the next two here.

The current work hopes to contribute to interdisciplinary studies of Chinese art, religion, and science. From the visual perspective, it hopes to add to the on-going examination of charts or maps (tu 図) and to enrich our understanding of the representation and perception of what “body” means in Chinese visual culture. In terms of Daoist studies, my dominantly visual approach aims to complement the many textual approaches on this topic. This study also adds to the growing scholarship of Daoist art, which has so far focused more on public devotional paintings and statuary and less on private imagery associated with meditation and visualization.

STEPHEN JACKOWICZ

Daoist Incantations for Acupuncture
This paper examines the use of Daoist incantations in conjunction with acupuncture as described in the Zhenjiu dacheng (Great Compendium of Acupuncture and Moxibustion) from the late Ming Dynasty. Utilizing primary source material, the paper traces the background of Daoist incantations in the period in relationship to the contemporaneous techniques of acupuncture. The combination of these techniques is explored in the literature. The author then presents the results of a case study utilizing the combined incantation-acupuncture technique comparing the efficacy of the combined methodology versus the use of needle technique alone.

M. CRISTINA ZACCARINI

Daoist-inspired Healing in Daily Life: Lü Dongbin and the Multifaceted Roles of Chinese Barbers
This paper examines the role of Chinese barbers in the 19th and 20th centuries, utilizing recent Daoist scholarship together with the contemporaneous observations of Western physicians and travelers. The study’s impetus emerges from Dr. John Dudg soon’s depictions of Chinese health practices as rooted in Daoism as well as connected to the healing role of barbers. Other Western observers who did not share Dr. Dudg soon’s positive opinions and were critical of Chinese hygiene yet also contribute information on the important role of barbers.

The paper further examines the barber’s role in light of Paul Katz’s descriptions of popular interpretations of the immortal Lü Dongbin. As the patron deity of barbers he is represented as one who touches the lives of the poor and heals the sick. Western observers describe Chinese barbers as providing both haircuts and health services to promote circulation through the stimulation of energy (qì 氣) flow. Thus they made affordable health care available to locals who often did not have access to Western medicine.

GEORGES FAVRAUD

A Daoist Career in Modern China: Wang Xin’an of the Southern Peak
Alive for most of the twentieth century, Wang Xin’an 王信安 (1918-1993) lived through the deep and violent social changes from which emerged the Chinese nation-state, technology, and modern economy. In the 1930s, he had been healed of his weak health and initiated in a monastic community by a master of the Quanzhen 全真 (Complete Authenticity) school. Then he became a master of Daoist liturgy, practicing both personal ritual techniques of internal alchemy and healing as well as the collective recitation of scriptures and offerings to the celestial hierarchy. Master Wang accomplished virtuous achievements and established his meritorious existence and identity.

After 1949 he moved to Hunan province and became a leading official representative of the Daoist community of the Southern Peak. As the new state endowed Daoism with a national administrative hierarchy and a globalized leisure class and tourism industry developed, the Southern Peak was reinvented as a site of natural, cultural, and spiritual heritage. Master Wang dedicated his life in this changing milieu to build official Daoism in Hunan.
JENNIFER LUNDIN RITCHIE

The Guodian Laozi and Taiyi shengshui: A Cognitive Science Reading

Scholarly debate continues as to the nature and purpose of the Guodian edition of the Laozi (also known as the Daode jing). Its age, its mainly “Confucian” tomb-mates, and its written contents make it an extremely unusual version of the text.

Many themes “characteristic” of the text are not present: urgings to be weak and passive like water and the female, references to Confucian terms and values, plus most chapters referring to Dao. Its three bundles contain previously unseen material, including a new cosmology, called the Taiyi shengshui, which does not correspond to any other allegedly Daoist cosmology.

Putting the Guodian Laozi in its historical, philosophical, and political context has provided insight into the reason this text (and the whole collection) was assembled the way it was. Several scholars support the idea that the Guodian Laozi was meant to be a tool for rulership, and specifically used for instructing the Crown Prince Qingxiang of Chu.

Recognizing rulership as the dominant theme of the text, I was able to use cognitive science to develop a new lens through which to read the Guodian Laozi, based on the embodied experience of Verticality, which includes the entailments of status, power, and leadership. The received Laozi has traditionally been read through the lens of dichotomy, driven by the prominence of yin and yang metaphorical entailments. However, since the contents of the Guodian Laozi do not seem to correspond well to the received text, I believe it should be read through a different lens—one more suited to its particular contents and themes. This new lens not only retains the relevant entailments of the yin-yang metaphor, but it goes much farther in explaining the terms and images present in the Guodian edition of the text, and reframes them such a way that clearly shows how almost every verse in the text relates to rulership.

LUCAS WEISS

Rectifying the Deep Structures of the Earth: Sima Chengzhen and the Standardization of Daoist Sacred Geography in the Tang

The 8th century saw Shangqing Daoism reach unprecedented heights in terms of imperially sanctioned ritual authority in Tang China. This paper discusses the role of space, particularly sacred mountains and caves, in the attainment of that authority. I look closely at the relationship between the Shangqing patriarch Sima Chengzhen and Emperor Xuanzong. Sima’s work to transform the imperial rituals of the Five Marchmounts served to align imperial cult cosmology with that of Shangqing. I further examine Sima’s emplacement by the emperor at the mountain monastery of Wangwu. I argue that the centrality of Wangwu shan within the Shangqing sacred geography made it an ideal setting not only for Sima to express his authority over the sacred spaces of the imperium, but also to establish a systematic sacred geography for Shangqing Daoism.

PAUL CROWE

Nature, Motion, and Stillness: Li Daochun’s Vision of the Three Teachings

This article examines the way in which inner alchemist Li Daochun (fl. 1280-1290) understood the relationship between his own practice of cultivation and that of Buddhists and Ru Literati. Though Li viewed himself as a practitioner of Golden Elixir methods he also understood his practice from the perspective of what he called the “Dao of Peerless Orthodox Reality.” According to him this Dao existed at a level that both transcended and united the “Three Teachings.” Two aspects of this unifying Dao will be examined here: First is the concept of inner nature, which Li believed Daoists, Buddhists, and Literati shared. Second is the metaphor of motion and stillness in relation to the cultivation of that inner nature. By examining these facets of Li’s perspective on practice one gains insight into his sense of religious identity and an appreciation for the self-consciously ambiguous or perhaps fluid nature of that identity.

IAN JOHNSON

Two Sides of a Mountain: The Modern Transformation of Maoshan

This paper examines the reconstruction of the Maoshan temple complex in Jiangsu province. Since being almost completely obliterated between the 1930s and 1970s, it has been rebuilt in spectacular fashion, with more than a dozen temples dotting the region. Most are part of an ambitious tourism project but one, the nunnery Qianyuan guan, has taken a different approach, shunning entrance fees and mass tourism.

These differing strategies reflect wider pressures facing Daoism and other organized religions in China to support the local economy by promoting tourism. They also raise questions about potential gender-based differences in Chinese religion and the ability of China’s traditional religions to compete in a new, dynamic religious landscape.
BEDE BENJAMIN BIDLACK
Alchemy and Martial Arts: Wang Yannian’s Gold Mountain Daoism
Historians of modern internal alchemy understand Sun Xuanqing’s Gold Mountain Daoism to have been absorbed by Zhao Bichen’s Thousand Peaks subsect. However, Wang Yannian, a Taipei taiji quan master, taught a method of internal alchemy that shared Zhao’s lineage and preserved the Gold Mountain name. This article explores the differing accounts of how Gold Mountain left the confines of its Complete Perfection roots. They reveal different sentiments of the laity towards the clergy in Republican China. In addition, the article explores the details and aims of the method itself. Even though Wang was clear that the goal of the method was to produce an immortal pill, he emphasized meditation’s utility as an internal foundation for taiji quan. Nonetheless, the system reveals the sophistication of Daoist alchemy and is clearly not simply a basic qigong meditation.

GALIA DOR
The Chinese Gate: A Unique Void for Inner Transformation
The gate, a conspicuous element in the Chinese architectural landscape, appears as the character men 门 in ancient Daoist philosophers as well as in later religious Daoist and Buddhist texts, works on Chinese medicine, and more. Its many, varied occurrences notwithstanding, this paper focuses on the symbolic meaning and significance of the gate in the first chapter of the Daode jing and its medieval expansions in combination with an analysis of the gate’s role in architecture.

Gates in architecture differ according to structural type, and their symbolic meanings vary accordingly. Nevertheless, they all constitute a powerful locus that conveys diverse messages and connects two different realms—inside and outside. I suggest taking the Chinese gate as a significant, multi-layered symbol that constitutes a “potentiality gap,” in which a rite of passage takes place. It also offers a unique opportunity for any human being to take a quantum-leap of the mind and internal transformation. Earthly and textual gates can be named and discussed in ordinary language, yet they carry the potential of opening to the way to the world of absolute truth (i.e., take part in the creation of Dao), which cannot be named or talked about. Special emphasize will be given to one specific type of ‘transformative gate’, namely, texts (or books).

MIHWA CHOI
Materializing Salvation: A Liturgical Program and Its Agenda
The Wushang huanglu dazhai licheng yi synthesizes both old and new rituals dedicated to saving souls from purgatory at the time that the Yellow Register Purgation has increasingly become a popular form of death ritual. The ritual presented in the text is designed to assure supplicants that the ritual performance is successful in bringing about the salvation of the deceased.

The text adopts the “old method” of constructing the basic structure of the Ritual Enclosure, one that represents it as a micro-cosmos. As each space and item within the Ritual Enclosure functions as an index to the cosmos, they are expected to have a direct influence on that for which they stand. The ritual also employs a heavy use of official documents addressing deities and other spiritual beings in the highly bureaucratized World-beyond. Their official confirmation of the success of each rite is meant to assure the participants of the desired outcome of the liturgy.

The text also incorporates new highly theatrical liturgical programs such as the Rite of Smashing of Purgatory and burning talismans in the Rite of Refinement. Despite such a high level of dramatic performance, the ritual keeps the Ritual Master’s visualization as the very ground by which all ritual acts are made possible because they are performed with the assumption that the content visualized has been activated. As such, the ritual at once manifests the world of the imaginary that has taken place in the world of the Ritual Master’s visualization, but also acts upon that world. The ritual program offers a visual message underscoring the immediacy of the ritual efficacy of salvation that has taken place in the here-and-now of the altar.

ELMAR OBERFRANK
Secretly Transmitted Direct Pointers to the Great Elixir
This paper presents a complete annotated translation and exegesis of the Michuan dadan zhizhi 秘傳大丹直指 (Secretly Transmitted Direct Pointers to the Great Elixir), a late imperial text that deals with various practical, theoretical, and philosophical concepts in relation to internal alchemy. Despite its relevance and high quality, it has hardly been noticed so far in China and was only published very recently. In the West, it is virtually unknown, even among China scholars and Daoist practitioners. Its fifteen chapters have much to offer to our understanding of the system and process of internal alchemy.
Daniel M. Murray & James Miller

The Daoist Society of Brazil and the Globalization of Orthodox Unity Daoism

Taken out of Chinese cultural context, Daoism is often associated with physical cultivation practices such as qigong or taijiquan rather than the traditional lineages of Quanzhen or Zhengyi a hierarchically organized religion. The Daoist Society of Brazil, however, is an example of non-Chinese Daoist practice associated with the Zhengyi (Orthodox Unity) tradition. The society’s ordained Brazilian priests perform rituals before a largely non-Chinese lay congregation. The result is a cultural hybrid form of Daoist practice that provides insight into how Daoism is transforming through globalization.

Xu Liying

Daoist Temples in Modern City Life: The Singapore City God Temple

This paper is a case study of a the City God Temple in Singapore, examining how a traditional Chinese temple has adjusted and created a new, Daoist identity to keep pace with the social changes and development of a modern city. Chinese religion first arrived in Singapore with immigrants from southeast China shortly after the city was first discovered and colonized by the British in 1819. Their practitioners remained closely connected to their original places, perpetuating their deep memories and unique cultural characteristics. In recent decades, as both society and city have changed to keep pace with modernity, the temples had to find ways to balance traditional culture and modern life. The City God Temple is an example of a successful adaptation to social change by moving beyond traditional social structures into new management modes and by overcoming the multi-sectarian patterns of Chinese religiosity and creating a firm Daoist identity. In this study, I examine this process from three main perspectives: historical background, approaches to management, and religious identity.

JDS 7 (2014)

Paul D'AMBROSO

Blending Dao: An Analysis of Images in the Daode jing

The well-known ambiguity surrounding the concept of Dao, especially in the Daode jing, has led some scholars to argue for “religious” interpretations. They find the difficulty in defining Dao intentional and argue that Dao cannot be appreciated through language, but requires some personal change. In this essay I will argue that these types of interpretations, generally speaking, reduces the text to a mainly religious (i.e. faith based) thought by ignoring important philosophical elements of Daode jing. The inability to put Dao into words does not negate any or all comprehension of Dao; it merely informs readers that Dao cannot be exhausted in words. Accordingly, elucidating this idea seems to be one of the major focuses of the text, which is done mainly through the wide use of a variety of images. In order to tackle this issue I propose a “cross-cultural image analysis.” I will use metaphor interpretation of Western cognitive science to examine images in the Daode jing and show how they are related to aid in an understanding of Dao. I employ the “multiple blend” metaphor analysis purposed by Gilles Fauconnier and Mark Turner (2003), a template that explains how a series of metaphors can work together to produce new dimensions of comprehension. When Fauconnier and Turner describe multiple blends they do so in order to explain how the mind works (2003, 17-18). This “multiple blend analysis” is slightly different: it explains how one could think of the images in Daode jing.

Thomas E. Smith

The Many Faces of Master Redpine

This paper discusses early beliefs concerning Master Redpine, using his biography in the Liexian zhuan as a point of departure. After briefly discussing the Li-xian zhuan account’s relationship to ancient rain-making rituals, it illustrates Master Redpine’s relationship with other Chinese rain gods, with reference to the findings of Max Kaltenmark (1953), particularly through their associated colors (red and green) and movements. The author concurs with Kaltenmark’s description of Master Redpine, on one level, as a kind of tree sprite, specifically of the Chinese tamarisk, and provides more supporting textual evidence for this. This paper then explores Master Redpine’s role in the early Higher Clarity Daoism, in which Redpine becomes but one manifestation of a deity who can appear in many different guises—a primordial being of pure energy, the Star of Longevity, the planet Mars, a wandering teacher, and even a terrifying spirit who comes to mete out punishment. The possibility that Master Redpine is effectively the father of Yang Xi’s (330-386) celestial spouse, Consort An, is explored. The paper finally returns to consider the significance of the placement of Master Redpine’s biography at the head of the Liexian zhuan, and to contrast it with the last biography in order to bring out that text’s broader perspective on the world.

DAVID BOYD
The “Other” Dao in Town: Early Lingbao Polemics on Shangqing
Most studies on Daoist polemics have focused on the conflict and competition between Buddhism and Daoism. An equally important and hitherto understudied field of inquiry is the polemics revolving around the early conflicts and competition between different Chinese religious movements commonly labeled, or rather aspiring to the label “Daoist.” This paper examines polemics in early Daoist scriptures concerned with issues of “identity” and “orthodoxy.” Ironically, the use of the label “Daoism” has had a homogenizing effect on our understanding of the internal relations of the various traditions subsumed by it and has smoothed over internal competition with a thin veneer of semantic unity masking the historical competition over just who should rightly be called “Daoist.” The 4th century saw the rise of two distinct forms of Daoism: Shangqing and Lingbao. Rarely in the history of religion have two traditions emerged in such close temporal and geographical proximity to one another. This proximity created fierce competition for patronage and prestige. This article examines the direct, indirect, and camouflaged ways in which the emergent Lingbao tradition sought to assert its superiority over its neighboring Shangqing rival.

PAUL CROWE
Dao Learning and the Golden Elixir: Shared Paths to Perfection
This article is, to some extent, a continuation of thoughts expressed in a previous article in the Journal of Daoist Studies (Crowe 2010), where motion and stillness were examined as sources of continuity between the “three teachings” as imagined by Li Daochun and his disciples. The present article considers that continuity from a different vantage point, turning the focus on our characterization of the relationship between Ru (literati) daoxue (Learning of the Way) and jindan (golden elixir) ways of cultivation. It is suggested here that common ground is found, not by bridging two essentially and categorically differing groups, but rather by bringing to light shared perspectives on soteriological ends and on the framing of praxis intended to realize those ends.

P. G. G. VAN ENCKEVORT
The Three Treasures: An Enquiry into the Writings of Wu Shouyang
This essay examines the concept of the three treasures—jing, qi and shen—in the writings of Wu Shouyang as an example of late imperial discourse on internal alchemy (neidan). A well-known concept basic to Daoism as well as Chinese culture in general, the three treasures are differently interpreted in various contexts, and the specific ideas associated with each of them shape the views of human nature and immortality in which they play a central role. While the metaphorical registers are the most distinctive characteristic of inner alchemy discourse, the three treasures are presented by Wu and other inner alchemy authors as the basic ontological categories to which most metaphors refer. As such, they connect the theory and practice of cultivation with ordinary human experience, and place both in a broader cosmological perspective. Moreover, one of the main soteriological objectives of cultivation—the creation of a yang spirit (yangshen)—should be understood within the matrix of ideas associated with the three treasures. A close analysis of these ideas, therefore, reveals much about the fundamental aspirations of internal alchemy and the meaning of immortality (xian) in this context.